Abstract:The research is aimed to analysis on determining factors of meat demand of domestic chicken in the City of Manado. It thus uses quantitative analysis using regression data of time series during 26 (twenty-six) years, from 1990 to 2015, comprising of: total demand of the broiler's meat, price of the broiler's egg, price of tuna, price of chili, edible oil, and income per capita. In detail, data sources are derived from Statistic Central Agency (BPS) of North Sulawesi, Service of Food of the City of Manado, and Service of Agriculture and Veterinary of North Sulawesi Province. As a result, it is found that total demand of the broiler's meat, price of the broiler's egg, price of tuna, price of chili, edible oil, and income per capita holds significant role on the demand of the broiler's meat in the City of Manado. Thus, price elasticity of the broiler's meat, price of other goods, and income per capita were inelastic, showed by the value of elasticity was smaller at 1 (one), where the demand of the broiler's meat was insensitive on the changing of its price, price of other goods (price of the broiler's egg, price of tuna, price of chili, and edible oil), and income per capita. If the price of those goods and income per capita increased as 1%, so the demand of the broiler's meat would change much smaller than 1 %. In addition, the broiler's egg and tuna were substitute goods for the broiler's meat, while chili and edible oil were complementary. The broiler's meat were normal goods for society in the City of Manado.

1. Introduction

The broiler's meat is one of food commodities derived from poultry, which is significant in fulfilling public's nutritional necessity. Thus, the demand for it is increasing in line with the growth of population, income, improvement education level, life style changing, and increasing awareness of balanced nutrition. Some factors influencing the broiler's meat as a favorite food and well-liked by Indonesian are: (1) having better taste and texture quality (organoleptic) (2) various availabilities and easy to cook (convenience food), and (3) providing affordable price than other veterinary products [8] [11] [12] [13].

In the City of Manado, the demand of the broiler's meat tends to increase. [5] and [6] showed that the consumption of the broiler's meat in the City of Manado was continuously increasing by the increasing rate of 1.02 percent/year. Compared with other districts/cities, the highest consumption level of the broiler's meat in the City of Manado was 87.5 percent from the supply of the broiler's meat. Further, this situation depicts that City of Manado, a strategically territorial gate of North Sulawesi Province, is an area of consumption service rather than production area. It is supported with data of production growth and consumption on the broiler's meat in the City of Manado during 2011 – 2014, where its total of consumption was larger than total of production.

Meanwhile, price increasing and total of demand on the broiler's meat in the City of Manado also correspondingly occurred during 2006 – 2015. However, it is against the law of supply that if price of certain goods increased, total of demand on certain goods would decrease. Contrastingly, if a price decreased, total of demand on such goods would increase [22] [23]. Other studies set out that total of demand on the broiler's meat was not only influenced by its price, but was also influenced by other factors, such as price of cow's meat, domestic chicken's meat, fish, edible oil, rice, total of population, avian influenza's outbreak and attribute of
