ABSTRACT

Tourism is one source of revenue to government. Many authorities have been exploring and developing their tourism potentials, especially the natural based tourism. Any development should take into account the carrying capacity of the region under development to provide quality service while conserving the nature. We have carried out a study to analyze economically the ecotourism resort of Liang beach in the Bunaken National Park (BNP) in North Sulawesi, Indonesia. Analysis was conducted on the carrying capacity of the region and visit rates due to changes in admission fee to the resort. The BNP existing condition has not been developed optimally and the tourism activities have not been oriented for environmental conservation. With purposive sampling method, 80 park visitors who came from various zones of origin were selected. The carrying capacity of the region (CCR) was measured directly with the help of Google earth. The results of the study: 1. The diving area of 88 hectares is capable of accommodating 3520 tourists per week; 2. The snorkeling area of 1 ha can accommodate 67 people; 3. The boating activity with a line path of 3866 m can hold 928 people; 4. The beach with a 1176-m-coastal-line is capable of accommodating 118 people. Overall, the BNP can accommodate 4,633 people per week. In the demand side, the Zonal Travel Cost Model approach (ZTCM) shows the potential of visitors from various surrounding areas of origin an average 1890 people. Through a simulation on tariff change during holidays (demand during holidays) and during the working days (demand during working days) it was concluded that the resort still has an appeal to increase the limited carrying capacity of the region. An appropriate management policy to increase revenue is expected.
